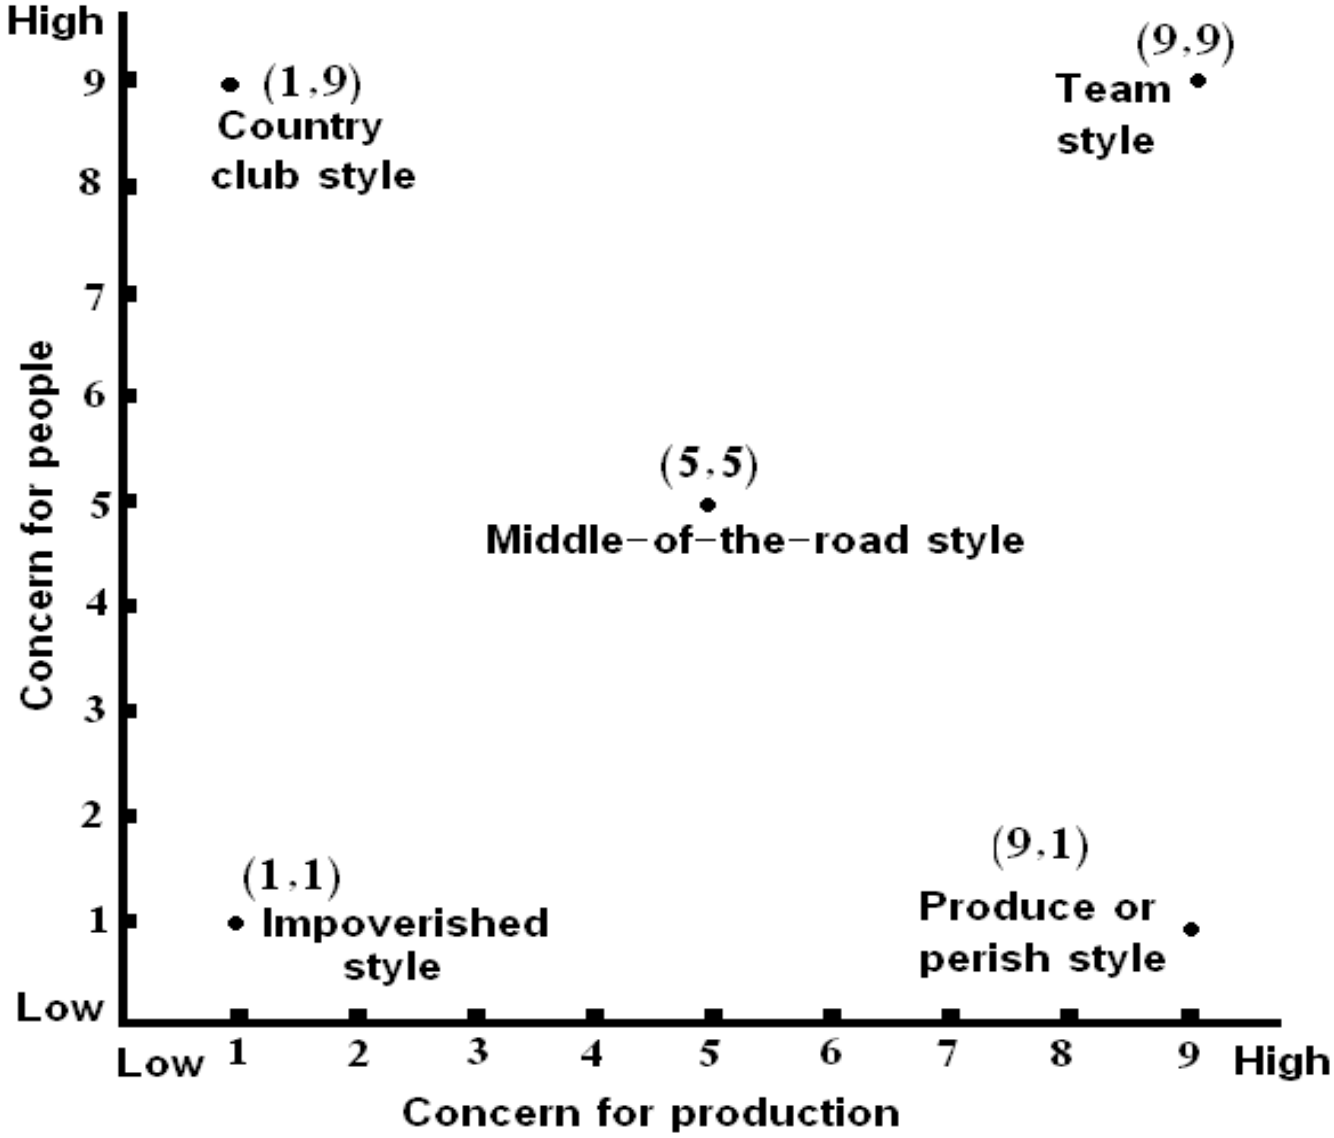
Managerial Grid

Behavioral leadership model developed by Robert R. Blake and Jane Mouton.

This model originally identified five different leadership styles based on :-

- Concern for people-the degree to which a leader considers the needs of team members, their interests, and areas of personal development when deciding how best to accomplish a task

- Concern for production. The degree to which a leader emphasizes organizational efficiency and high productivity when deciding how best to accomplish a task



High
9
8
7
6
5
4
3
2
1
Low
Concern for people
(1,9)
Country club style
(9,9)
Team style
(5,5)
Middle-of-the-road style
(1,1)
Impoverished
style
(9,1)
Produce or perish style
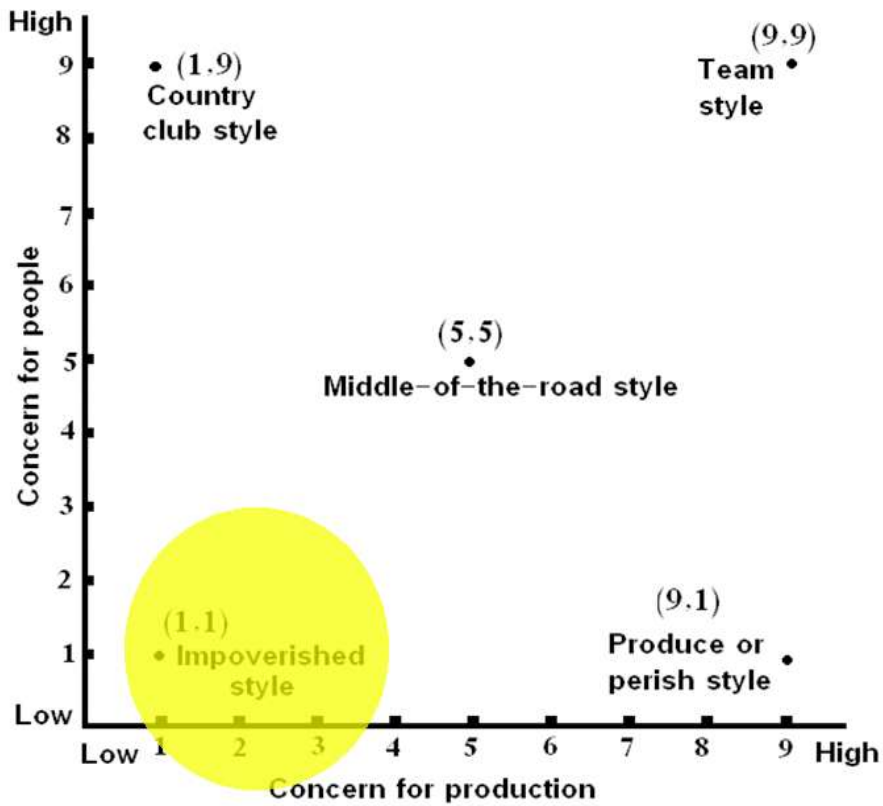
Low
1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
High
Concern for production

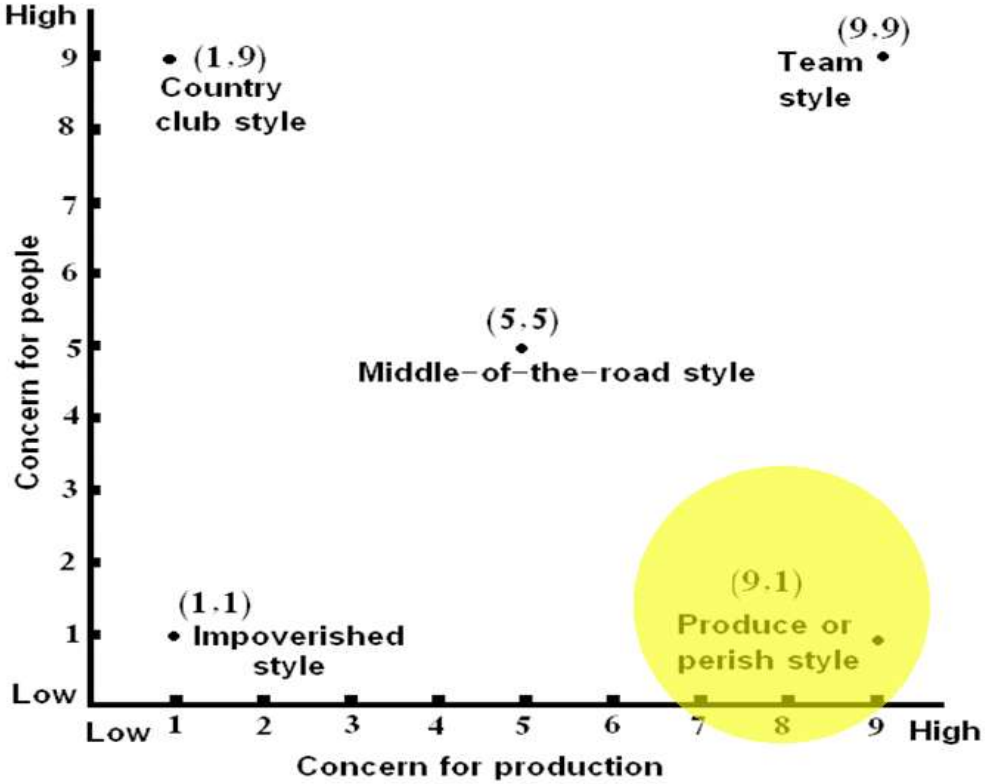
Impoverished style (Indifferent)

- Managers have low concern for both people and production.
- Managers use this style to preserve job and job seniority
- The main concern for the manager is not to be held responsible for any mistakes, which results in less innovative decisions.



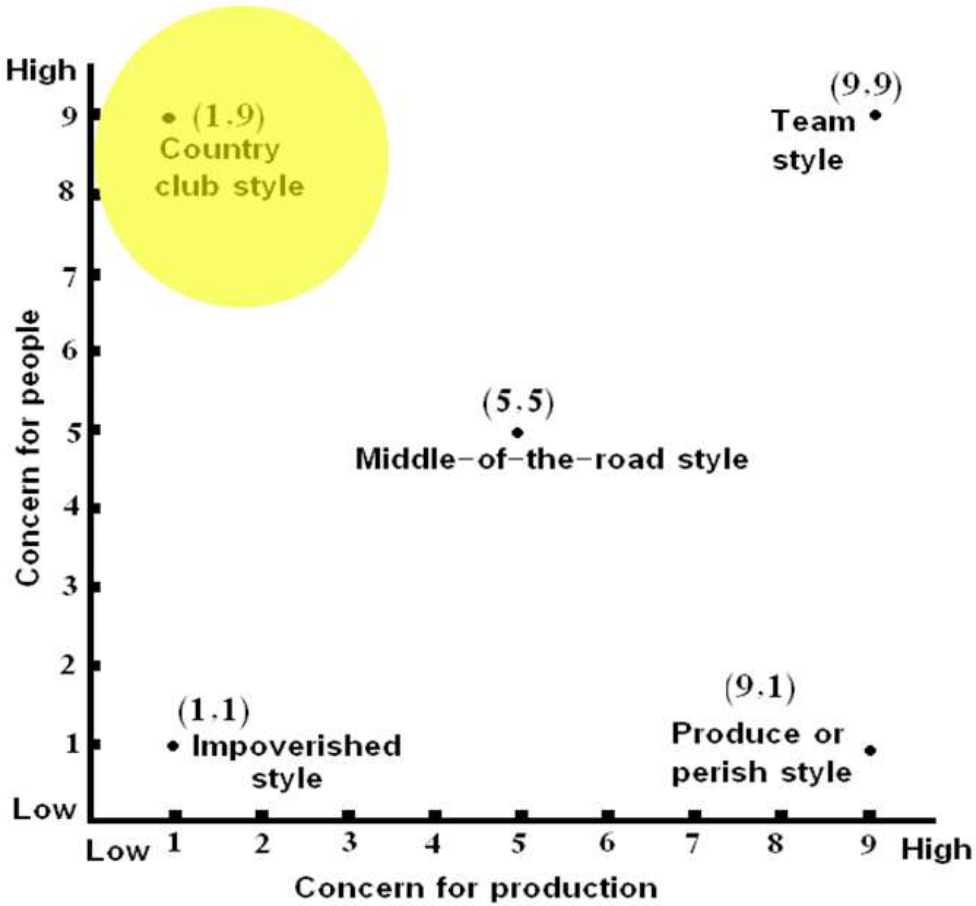
Produce or Perish(The dictatorial)

- High concern for production, and a low concern for people, managers using this style find employee needs unimportant
- Pressure employees through rules and punishments to achieve goals
- This style is often used in cases of crisis management.



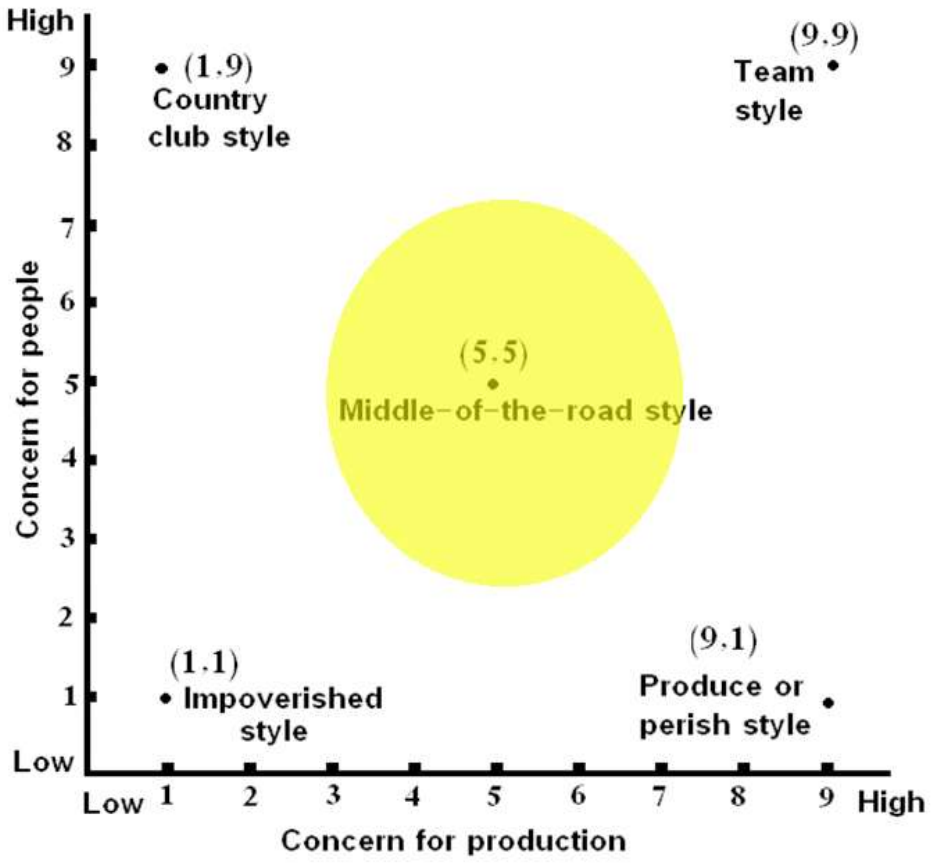
Country Club (Accommodating)

- High concern for people and a low concern for production.
- Managers using this style pay much attention to the security and comfort of the employees, in hopes that this will increase performance.
- The resulting atmosphere is usually friendly, but not necessarily very productive.



Middle-of-the-road (Status quo)

- Concern for both people and production
- Managers hope to achieve suitable performance
- Balance between company goals and workers' needs.
- Gives away a bit of each concern so that neither production nor people
- needs are completely met.



The Team style (sound)

- High concern is paid both to people and production.
- Managers choosing to use this style encourage teamwork and commitment among employees.
- This method relies heavily on making employees feel themselves to be constructive parts of the company.

- The opportunistic style: Individuals using this style do not have a fixed location on the grid. They adopt whichever behavior offers the greatest personal benefit.

- The paternalistic style: Managers using this style praise and support, but discourage challenges to their thinking.

Merit:

The Managerial or Leadership Grid is used to help managers analyze their own leadership styles through a technique known as grid training

Demerit:

The model ignores the importance of internal and external limits, matter and scenario. Also, there are some more aspects of leadership that can be covered but are not.